Developing an award-winning cashmere brand from the ground up

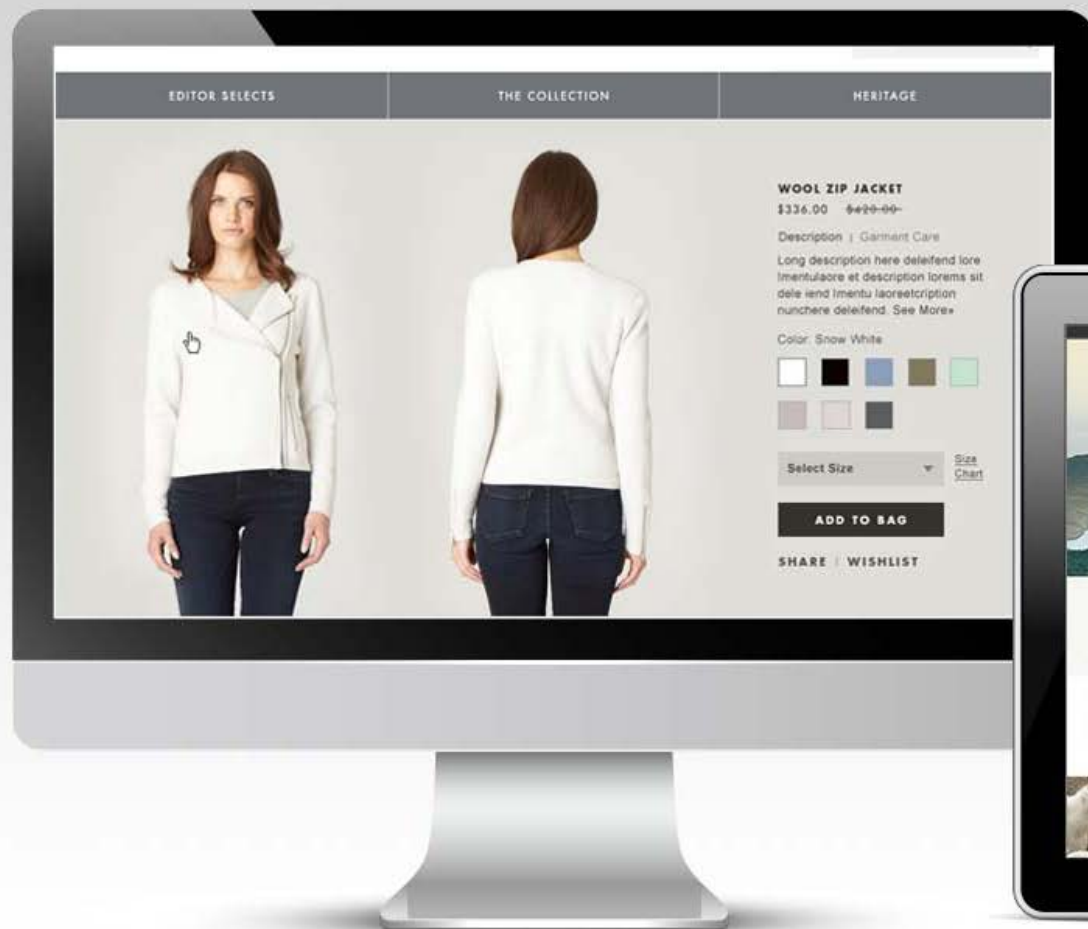

When Zhongyin Cashmere bought the 140-year-old Todd & Duncan brand, they had big plans to bring it to the US market and update the Scottish label's historic image for a new generation of fashion-forward, luxury consumers. They turned to Hagopian Ink to get that job done.

A visual brand based on heritage and luxury

Hagopian Ink worked with Todd & Duncan on a large-scale project that developed a brand identity design and overall marketing and web strategy for the US rollout. The first phase focused on visual branding including logo, stationery system, business cards, store signage, in-store hang tags, shopping bags and custom boxes. We took care to ensure that the visual identity highlighted Todd & Duncan's Scottish heritage as a signature element, and carried forward the quality, craftsmanship, luxury, modern elegance and sophistication of the cashmere line for future growth.

PHILOSOPHY

Inspiration stems from a combination of the tonal complexity of northern sky lines to the work of LA artist, Ingrid Calame, whose linear drawings and abstract paintings begin life as paper tracings that connect to the real world; from graffiti on the streets of LA to renaissance techniques, to create artistic fusions of line, form, texture and colour.

Virtual makeup lab introduces Lancôme to a new generation of consumers

When Lancôme launched a new eye brightening color palette product with a multi-channel campaign, they knew they needed to increase the brand's interactive appeal to a youthful, social media savvy audience of consumers. The goal was to form an emotional connection to the product through the use of interaction, experimentation and play.

The Facebook House of Color Magic Mirror allowed users to virtually experiment with Lancôme's new eye palette. Working with their own photos, consumers were able to adjust, refine and play with new makeup looks and share images with their friends.

Lancôme House of Color grew more than 2.93 million Facebook followers for the brand. As a result, Lancôme generated extensive online sales and sold out of the palettes during their first month on the market.

Clean beauty is calm beauty.

LoumBeauty.com launched with a goal to be the first complete skincare line to reverse the effects of stress on skin. The website needed to act as the leading tool to sell their line of unique products and it was falling short in conversions. Our job was to clarify the complex brand story, connect with their audience and solve Loum's UX challenges.

Clarifying a complex brand story

We created a comprehensive digital experience focusing on usability best practices, intuitive navigation, and a seamless customer experience for both mobile and desktop devices. We illustrated the effects of stress on skin visually and highlighted how Loum's key ingredients and formulas provide undeniable benefits. The new simplified messaging and imagery communicated serenity with clarity.

We all wear stress on our skin.

Life is stressful. But it's often our skin that suffers the most. Eight out of 10 leading skin concerns get significantly worse when we're stressed. So we decided to do something about it.

Calm skin is beautiful skin.

We collaborated with a leading psychodermatologist to develop a proprietary formula, Tri-Serene, which weaves together three of nature's most potent stress blockers.
